THE REPUBLICAN.

J. H. LEATHERMAN, Editor.

TUESDAY MORNING, JAN. 27, 1852.

The Essay of "Dow, 3d," on "Modern Infidelity," is on file, and will be published next week. Meanwhile, we would suggest to him that it would afford us much pleasure to hear from him frequently, during his sojourn in the "Pine Woods."

We congratulate our neighbor of the Whig, D. O. Merwin, Esq., upon his return to his editorial chair.—Mr. Wm. J. Keller, we perceive, has become publisher of the Whig.

FATAL OCCURRENCE—On Friday night last, as the locomotive of the West Feliciana Rail Road was running down from the Depot, at Woodville, to the shed-house, it unfortunately ran over an Irishman, by the name of William Hutchison, (who, being very drunk, had fallen on the track) and cut one of his legs nearly off, severely mangled the other, and otherwise mutilated him. Drs. Selby and Holt amputated the leg, but the unfortunate man was in such pain that he died in a few hours. It was very dark, and totally impossible for the Engineer or fireman to have seen the man, so that no blame is to be attached to the train.

The negroes Joe, Henry, and Albert, convicted at our last Circuit Court, of the murder of Mr. J. P. Humphries, were all hung on Friday last. The gates of the jail were thrown open and a large number of spectators were present. The negroes were repeatedly asked, while under the gallows, to state if they were guilty of the crime; but a planned refusal to say anything upon the subject, was manifested. In reply to the question of a spectator, who asked Albert what induced him to kill his master, he inadvertently said, "he did not know what made him do so, unless it was the devil."—Joe, the main hero in the tragedy, manifested no fear or excitement, and boldly declared that he was sorry he had humored the public so much as to have ever said as much about the murder of his master, as he had. In fact, all three of the negroes seemed determined to make no confession on the subject. They were brothers—and at the cutting of the cord, they were launched into eternity, to answer at the bar of God, for their innocence or guilt of the crime.

NEWTON FEMALE INSTITUTE.—We have received a newly printed pamphlet catalogue of the officers and members of this flourishing Institute, situated at Whitesville. The new year finds the Institute in the most flourishing condition. The catalogue contains the names of 73 young ladies. The whole course of studies in the Institute is divided into five departments, viz: Literature and Philosophy, Mathematics and Natural Sciences, Languages, Music and Painting. The Institute has a library, probably the largest of any female school in the South. Boarders have free access to the library. The teachers and pupils board in the same establishment, and every effort is made to give young ladies a true and agreeable home. "Perfect punctuality" is the standard presented to every pupil. The pupils have frequent opportunities of attending divine service, and are always accompanied by some member of the Institute. They are required to attend Sunday School, in the forenoon of each Sabbath, and in the afternoon, a lecture on Natural Philosophy, Evidence of Christianity, etc., delivered by some of the Professors.

All together, this is the best arranged and most successful Institute in the country, and we are rejoiced to see it so well appreciated by our discriminating citizens.

Recorder Baldwin, one of the oldest citizens of New Orleans, died on the 18th inst. The papers manifest much respect for his memory.

Election of Senator.

One of the first duties of the Legislature, says the Mississippi, was the election of Senators to fill the places vacated by Col. Davis and Gov. Foote. The Hon. J. J. McRae is now filling the place of the former by gubernatorial appointment, and that of the latter is still vacant. Consequently Mississippi has but one representative in the Senatorial branch of the National Legislature.

The majority in our State senate, appreciating the importance of discharging their sworn duty in this respect, passed a joint resolution, last week, proposing to bring on the election for one of the short terms on Thursday next. It was sent to the House, and there amended, by the dominant majority, so as to provide also for the election of a Senator, for the other short term and for the long term, commencing on the 4th of March, 1853. The senate will, doubtless, permit the resolution as amended to lie quietly on the table. It has exhibited its readiness to fill the vacancies, and permit Mississippi to speak her full voice in the National council. The journals show that it has attempted to discharge its duty, and it may well rest content with what it has done. If the time is still prolonged in which the State is without a full representation in the United States senate, and her interests suffer thereby, the blame will attach to the factious controlling majority in the other end of the Capitol.

The necessity of filling these vacancies is apparent to all; but why urge with ineffectual haste the election of the long term? It is not because the public exigency requires it, for the person chosen will not enter on the discharge of his duties until the 4th of March, 1853, and then merely take his seat while the senate is in executive session. Cannot the vacancies be filled; and the other election be left for the further consideration of the Legislature, so that if the election is entered into, ample time will be afforded for investigating the claims and qualifications of the various aspirants for the position. The last day of the session is early enough for that election; if, indeed, the present Legislature take upon itself the responsibility of holding it. We are not prepared to say what its course will be, but we seriously question the propriety of its going into election. It is well known that it was chosen upon collateral issues, and without reference to the grave questions which will demand the action of a Senator for that term, if elected. Why, then, should the matter not be referred back to the people so that their voice may be heard and their will reflected in the selection? Do the majority shrink from a contest before the people? It would seem so from the pertinacity with which they urge the election by the present Legislature. It is true that precedent would authorize the election of a Senator by this Legislature, but precedent will not justify a wrongful act.—The Tennessee Legislature, having a decided whig majority, has, under similar circumstances, referred the election back to the people. The Alabama Legislature will, from present indications in that body, pursue the same course; and we would respectfully suggest that our Legislature should ponder long before it deprives the people of Mississippi of the power of selecting such a representative in the United States senate as they desire for the next six years after the 4th March, 1853.

Democratic State Convention.

The proceedings of the convention held in Jackson, on the 8th, occupy a large portion of our paper to-day. They are highly interesting, and present in satisfactory terms the union and harmony of our party. We bespeak for them a careful perusal. The Flag-Whig—the Union, says the convention, "was a grand rally of the Democracy."

There was an informal though a happy reunion of the compromise and anti-compromise democrats and whiggery, which tried to introduce its hideous body into the convention on the 5th, under the livery of democracy, but was detected and kicked out into the streets, in all its nudity. The federalists will have to meet their usual defeat on November next. They worked like T.ogens, to produce a division in the democracy, but they have signally failed.

Circuit Court of Adams Co.

The trial of the allegation in the indictment of Baylor Wynn, charged with the murder of Wm. Johnson, that the prisoner is a man of color, resulted in the Jury being unable to agree. They were out 36 hours, and were finally discharged. The Jury, it is understood, stood six to six.

The case of Bill, a slave, charged with the murder, week before last, of his master, Mr. Lassley, was tried on Wednesday; the prisoner was found guilty of manslaughter, but recommended by the Jury to the mercy of the Court and Executive. The prisoner was defended by W. T. Martin and G. W. L. Smith, Esqrs., whose speeches are spoken of as masterly efforts.—Nat. Courier.

For the Woodville Republican.

American Enterprise!
Frank Leatherman.—This is rather an extensive foundation upon which to build a very limited edifice, but it strikes us as a very appropriate one, for others to build upon—time has been, when we boasted that every department of business was supported and conducted by the skill, sagacity and enterprise of the sons and daughters of our own soil, aided, perhaps, in some instances, by the intelligence of adopted citizens; but by some means or other, we are overwhelmed with an ingress of population that have monopolized our trade and business, much to their own interest and emolument, triumphing over the supineness, apathy and indolence, of our native born subjects.

To view this matter on a small scale, look at our small villages and see who compose the business portion of the people? Who are foremost in business and who are most prosperous? They are principle foreigners who, by industry, tact and perseverance, have commenced with a penny and accumulated thousands. It is much to their credit that they have thus taken the lead, it honors us to mark their course; but much to the mortification of our natives, who through their want of zeal, energy and shrewdness, have carelessly and indolently succumbed to foreign adventure.

We seem to have lost sight of all our puritanical and republican principles, and blind to our own interest—the willing victims of foreign craft. We seem to idolize, lionize and patronize, every thing foreign to the neglect and even contempt of every thing American.

The advocate of every personage from Kosciusko down to the itinerant jeweller and petty dealer in tape and needles, is hailed with open arms and enthusiastic welcome, as the home of the pilgrim and the land of rest. Nothing can be popular or fashionable, without the label of a foreign pass.—This is all fortunate enough for the successful monopolists. But, take a look at the stupid American, see him replenish his fashionable wardrobe—he avoids the plain and neatly fitting dress of a native, but trusts his legs six-inches through a shapeless pair of Dutch breeches, much to the exposure of his ill-formed ancles—in form and fit, much resembling the stiffness of things, his body unceremoniously enveloped in a coat, that would be rejected from the museum of a comparative anatomist. Be it swallow-tail, a sack or a "blouse," it is never a fit and no comfort in it—none but a Dutchman can appreciate and feel at home in them.

No sculpture would risk his reputation or be mad enough to represent a living man in the toggery of Dutch slovenliness, so disfiguring his personal identity, that the mother who gave him birth, could not refrain from an involuntary desire to laugh at the figure. Of all beings in the world we the redoubtable liberty-loving people are the greatest slaves to the despotism of foreign fashions. Turkish looseness, or French tightness is all the same to us, if it partakes not of the Anglo-Saxon. In fact our easy indifference will soon metamorphose us into the facsimile of Dutch pictures, without the recuperative power of native energy.

We are already made to believe that cotton is wool and cotton is silk, and eventually the perseverance of the Dutch, will convince us that slops and kraut, is the proper diet of the gods—the sine qua non of genteel rotundity.

Naturalists assure us, that the lower order of animals display more sagacity than man, and often thwart all their attempts at subjugation. Nature has given them an instinct to do so,—man the last work of creation, was by proxy deceived by a serpent, and his subsequent condemnation and trial should in a measure act as a check to our unsuspecting and gullible propensities. In the senate of organization we are at a loss where to place the Dutchman. From his peculiar attachment to the monkey and hand organ, we suspect his consanguinity.

We would not pretend to decide this mooted point, but recommend the investigation of the subject as one of interest and importance. Indeed we do, "yaw!"
Cottage Grove. TIMOTHY.

Died.
On the evening of the 8th inst., at the residence of Wm. B. Madden, Esq., in this county, Mrs. ELIZABETH J. JETER, aged 43 years and 8 months.

The deceased has, for several years, been a member of the Baptist Church—a meek and pious Christian—a sincere friend, and a warm and devoted mother. She was the subject of a long indisposition, but bore the tortures of the relentless disease with Christian fortitude. She was perfectly resigned to the will of God, and passed away into the arms of her Saviour, as one falling into a pleasant sleep. She leaves a bereaved son, and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn her loss, yet they are consoled by the reflection that "her loss is her eternal gain."—"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."
